Introduction

From 6 April 2006 (commonly referred to as 'A-Day'), new simplified pension laws will be introduced in the UK.

The new laws, referred to as 'pensions simplification', will change pension laws overnight and the same tax rules will apply to all pensions. The new laws will apply to everyone, no matter what type of pension scheme they belong to or when it began.

This booklet aims to:

– give you a summary of the main new laws relevant to your Equitable policy; and

– help you understand if you need to take any action and, if so, what you need to do.

The New Rules

The following sections provide a summary of the new rules being introduced from 6 April 2006.

HM Revenue and Customs (HMRC) approval

From 6 April 2006, pension schemes no longer need approval or to have scheme changes approved. However, each pension scheme will need to be registered. All approved pension schemes at 5 April 2006 will automatically be registered with HM Revenue and Customs which used to be called Inland Revenue.

Contributions

There are two new rules relating to the contributions to your pension arrangements.

1 Annual allowance

The annual allowance starts at £215,000, and is the most that you (or anyone on your behalf) can pay into pension schemes in any one year without having to pay tax. The annual allowance each tax year is as follows.

Tax year	Annual allowance
2006/2007	£215,000
2007/2008	£225,000
2008/2009	£235,000
2009/2010	£245,000
2010/2011	£255,000

The annual allowance does not apply to the year when you take the last of your retirement benefits from this plan or to the year in which you die.

2 Earnings

If you pay personal contributions in any one tax year that are more than your earnings in that year (or £3,600 if greater), you will not get tax relief on the extra amount.

Checking contributions

You are responsible for making sure that all the contributions paid are within the two rules set out above. We will not monitor the contributions paid.

Your tax return form for 2006/2007 will have a section to fill in about pension contributions.

Death benefits

The contributions paid towards death-in-service benefits count towards the annual allowance.

Benefits

Lifetime allowance

If the total of all your pension savings being paid are worth more than your lifetime allowance when you take your benefits, you will have to pay tax. The standard lifetime allowance, which will be used for most people, is as follows.

Tax year	Standard lifetime allowance
2006/2007	£1,500,000
2007/2008	£1,600,000
2008/2009	£1,650,000
2009/2010	£1,750,000
2010/2011	£1,800,000

If you go above these limits, the pension scheme trustees will work out the tax you owe and pay it to HM Revenue and Customs for you.

Tax-free cash

When you take your benefits, you will be allowed to take up to a quarter of the total fund, up to the amount of any lifetime allowance you have left, as a cash sum free of any tax.

More details

Retirement options

There are more options available to you once you decide to take your pension benefits. To help you consider the full choices available, you may want to get independent financial advice.

Drawing a pension

People no longer have to retire from their employer's service before they can start drawing pension benefits. However if you do not retire, the terms of your Equitable Life policy state that there may be an early withdrawal adjustment if you draw benefits at a time other than when you retire or when you die.

Retirement age

From 6 April 2010, the minimum age for starting to draw a pension will normally be increased from 50 to 55.

Death benefits

When you die, if the value of all of your benefits from your pension arrangements is more than your lifetime allowance, you may pay tax.

Taking small pension funds as cash

If the total value of your pension benefits when you come to take them is less than £15,000, and you are 60 or older, you will be able to take them all as cash. However, you will have to pay tax. The limit of £15,000 is 1% of the standard lifetime allowance and will increase in line with that allowance.

Divorce

If a court makes an order sharing pension benefits, this could affect your lifetime allowance. You should tell us if a pension-sharing court order is made.

Special arrangements

Special arrangements – for large funds

There are special arrangements if the total value of all your pension benefits at 5 April 2006 will be more than £1,500,000 or is likely to grow to more than the standard lifetime allowance at any time in the future.

If you think this will apply to you, please ask for our fact sheet. There are details of how to do this set out below. This leaflet does not provide financial advice. If you need financial advice, you should contact an independent financial adviser. If you do not already have an adviser, see 'To find a financial adviser' in the 'More information' section of this leaflet.

Special arrangements – tax-free cash

At the moment, occupational pension schemes allow their members to receive a tax-free cash amount when they retire based on their years of service and salary. If this formula provides a tax-free cash amount of more than 25% of the value of your pension benefits at 5 April 2006 and the information needed to work out the protected amount (in other words, information about salary, service with the employer and other pension benefits you may have at 5 April 2006) is available, you may be able to protect this amount. You do not need to register this protection with HM Revenue and Customs.

Special rules apply if you have a large fund and have registered for enhanced or primary protection (or both).

Special arrangements – early retirement ages

Unless you had a right to retire from the scheme before age 55 (see below) from 6 April 2010 you will not be able to take your retirement benefits from this pension scheme until you reach age 55.

If you have a right to retire before age 55, you can take your benefits from the earlier age, as long as you became a member of the scheme no later than 5 April 2006. Although it is not entirely clear what is considered to be a right to retire before age 55, HM Revenue and Customs have said that they do not consider that schemes that allow you to retire early with your employer's permission gives you the actual right to retire.

Some members may have an approved early retirement age (for example, professional footballers). In most of these cases, special arrangements continue after 6 April 2010.

Questions and answers for members of individual pension plans

You should read this leaflet with the booklet 'Important changes affecting your Equitable pension – a guide for members of individual pension plans'.

1. When do the new rules start to affect my pension?

Most of the changes will come into effect from 6 April 2006. This date is commonly referred to as 'A-day'.

2. What changes will directly affect me?

For most savers, there will be very little change. If you have a very large pension fund, there are some things you need to do (see the section 'Special arrangements – for large funds' in our booklet). The booklet describes the main changes.

3. I have heard that you will no longer monitor contributions being paid into my pension anymore. Is this true?

Yes it is. From 6 April 2006 there is no limit on the number of pension schemes you can belong to. This means that we will be unable to monitor the contributions you pay. You will need to tell the Inland Revenue (now known as HM Revenue and Customs) about pension contributions through your tax return form.

4. I was hoping to have saved more than £1,500,000 in my pension funds when I retire. Do the new rules stop me doing that?

No, you can still build up a fund as large as you like, but if your total pension savings and benefits go over the standard lifetime allowance (£1,500,000 for the 2006/2007 tax year) when you retire, you may have to pay some tax. (See the section 'Special arrangements – for large funds' in our booklet.) You may want to get independent financial advice for help in this area.

5. Will the changes affect the tax-free cash I can take when I retire?

Normally everybody will be able to take up to a quarter of your pension fund as tax-free cash in the future. Our booklet provides more details if you have the right from 5 April 2006 to take a larger tax-free cash sum.

6. Do I need to do anything after A-day?

If you or somebody on your behalf is currently contributing more than the annual allowance (£215,000 for the 2006/2007 tax year) to all the pension schemes you belong to, you may want to get financial advice.

7. Will I have more flexibility and choice when I retire?

Yes, we will give you more details as you get nearer your retirement date.

8. What is my lifetime allowance?

Usually your lifetime allowance is the same as the standard lifetime allowance. Your lifetime allowance may be higher because HM Revenue and Customs have given you protection on your benefits at 5 April 2006. It could be higher or lower because you have received or paid a divorce pension credit or received or paid a transfer value from or to an overseas pension fund.
